

Trump Confirms Biden's Team Distorted Job Numbers, Overestimating by 1.5 Million

For years, hardworking Americans have watched their grocery bills skyrocket and their savings dwindle. All while Washington bureaucrats insisted the economy was thriving. Something didn't add up between the glowing government reports and the harsh reality at kitchen tables across America. Sound familiar? Now we're learning why those numbers never made sense.

The disconnect between official statistics and everyday struggles has become impossible to ignore. Federal agencies celebrated fake job growth. Meanwhile, families struggled to make ends meet. Businesses closed their doors. Young people gave up on the American Dream. The question haunting millions was simple: if things were so good, why did everything feel so bad? (I'll tell you why—because they were lying to us.)

Trump Exposes Years of Deception

Days after President Trump fired his jobs czar for incompetence, he just dropped a bombshell that confirms what many suspected all along. Standing alongside respected economist Stephen Moore before a Purple Heart ceremony, Trump revealed something stunning. The Biden administration had inflated job growth numbers by a staggering 1.5 million positions. That's right—1.5 million fake jobs that never existed.

From 'The Post Millennial':

According to Moore, the Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS) under Biden deliberately overstated employment gains. Trump said this was part of a broader effort to mask the economic struggles faced by American families under the current administration.

Finally, someone said it out loud. This wasn't a simple accounting error—it was deliberate manipulation. Moore, a Heritage Foundation fellow and co-founder of the Committee to Unleash Prosperity, brought the receipts. The data shows how Biden's Labor Department systematically cooked the books throughout his entire term. And that fired jobs czar? She was apparently in on it from day one.

Democrats' History of Cooking the Books

This shocking disclosure fits a troubling pattern we've seen before. When Democrats need good headlines, they simply manufacture them. (Why tell the truth when a lie works better, right?) The 1.5 million phantom jobs weren't just numbers on a spreadsheet. They were lies used to justify failed policies. They silenced critics who dared question the official narrative.

Think about the real-world impact of these fabrications. The Federal Reserve made decisions based on fantasy. Congress spent billions using fake data. Countless policies were built on lies. While bureaucrats celebrated their fictional success, what happened to real Americans? Real people lost real jobs. Real businesses failed. Real families suffered. The very agencies meant to serve us were instead serving their political masters—classic swamp behavior.

Real Americans Pay the Price

Every inflated statistic represents a family deceived. An investor misled. A community failed by its government. Small business owners made hiring decisions based on false economic indicators. Can you imagine planning your family's future around government lies? Retirees adjusted their portfolios according to manipulated data. Young workers entered job markets that existed only in bureaucrats' imaginations.

Former President Biden's deception wasn't victimless. It was a betrayal of public trust on a massive scale. When government lies about something as basic as jobs, what else are they lying about? This undermines everything—economic planning, personal financial decisions, trust in our institutions. Everything.

This scandal demands immediate action. Congress must investigate how deep this deception runs. Who orchestrated it? Who knew? Where's the mainstream media on this story? (Crickets, as usual.) Every American deserves to know the truth about their economy. Not carefully crafted fiction designed to protect political careers. Under President Trump's leadership, the era of statistical manipulation is over. The swamp creatures can't hide anymore. The truth, no matter how uncomfortable for the establishment, will finally see the light of day.
